America Wild: National Parks Adventure (2016)

Directed by: Greg MacGillivray

Narrated by: Robert Redford

It didn't win any acting awards, but America Wild: National Parks Adventure is a fantastic documentary that outlines the creation of America's National Park System.

The story begins with President Theodore Roosevelt's serendipitous three-day trip through the Yosemite wilderness of California alongside revered mountaineer and naturalist John Muir. Roosevelt was so taken by this experience that upon returning to Washington, he decided to enact policy that would preserve the integrity and splendor of what he had seen. By the end of his presidency, Roosevelt had established federal protections on over 230 million acres of land across the country and provided Americans with the ability to enjoy the outdoors for the next century and, hopefully, years to come.

In addition to historical perspective, the film captures top-tier cinematography as it highlights the escapades of several wilderness explorers through some of the country's most majestic parks, including Pictured Rocks National Lakeshore in Michigan, Grand Teton National Park in Wyoming, Glacier National Park in Montana, and Canyonlands National Park in Utah.

Outdoor enthusiasts undoubtedly will be inspired by the film's beauty and add a handful of bucket-list locations to explore. Most important, the film conveys why the continued preservation of our most majestic nature sanctuaries is essential and how they can play a fundamental role in all our lives.
