

In the following text all punctuation has been removed.
Read the text and put them back in the right places.

Netflix to Offer Video Games as Part of its Service

Netflix has hired Mike Verdu as its new vice president of game development signaling that it plans to add a service for playing video games along with its film and television streaming

Verdu is joining Netflix from Facebook's Oculus where he was in charge of game development Before Oculus he worked at video game companies Electronic Arts and Zynga

Netflix added 37 million subscribers last year the largest one-year increase in its history largely due to COVID-19 lockdowns and restrictions However the company had a slow start to 2021 with its smallest first-quarter subscriber increase in four years

As life returns to normal in many places offering video games would give Netflix another way to continue adding to its nearly 208 million subscribers

It is not known if users will have to pay for games separately or if Netflix will include them as part of its video streaming service

Source : <https://engoo.com/app/daily-news/article/netflix-to-offer-video-games-as-part-of-its-service/yUOQxuiYEeuexq9nevhUGw>